

Pearl (Electric Literatures Recommended Reading Book 82)

In her introduction to this issue of Recommended Reading, Elizabeth Ellen, editor of Hobart and guest editor of this issue, says Pearl by Mary Miller is tight and droll and is in general classic Mary Miller. (There is sex and a line about having your period and wearing white pants, and more sex, and fingers in mouths, and a lot of LOL lines, like, Id been trying out the truth lately and people didnt like it. Okay, maybe thats not laugh-out-loud, maybe its more... smile-and-nod-to-yourself, knowingly.)...The opening of the story reminds me a little of Mary Gaitskills Secretary, possibly because its set in an office and there is mention of pantyhose and short skirts and high heels and (the aforementioned) fingers in mouths. About the author: Mary Miller is the author of Big World and The Last Days of California. About the Guest Editor: Hobart Publishing consists of the biannual/irregular print journal, Hobart: another literary journal; the daily Hobart Web; and the books division, Short Flight/Long Drive Books, all based in Ann Arbor, MI (and also, really, just on the Internet). The print arm is edited by Aaron Burch and Elizabeth Ellen and the last year or so has been especially exciting and, frankly, shocking, with regard to anthology inclusions, general recognitions, etc. Stories and essays from the last couple of issues have been reprinted in Best American Short Stories, Best American Essays, O. Henry Prize Stories, and New Stories From the Midwest. Lots more info/stories/content at www.hobartpulp.com.
